課程概述 course descriptions	This course introduces students to the foundations, theories, and practices of employment counseling and career guidance in a global and digital context. Students will explore both the job seeker's perspective (self-understanding, employability, adaptability) and the counselor's perspective (assessment, interview techniques, ethics). Through a bilingual EMI approach, students will practice English communication for professional settings and apply career counseling concepts creatively.
學習目標 learning objectives	By the end of this course, students will be able to: 1. Explain major theories and processes in career counseling and employment guidance. 2. Apply counseling and communication techniques in mock interview and case-based settings. 3. Analyze issues of labor market change, atypical employment, and workplace discrimination. 4. Collaborate in English to design and present a gamified educational tool related to employment counseling. 5. Reflect critically on their own career development and professional identity in bilingual writing.
