先修課程 Pre-requisite courses
課程目標 Course Objective	The graduate students in this master program are required to undertake a research process to complete his/her thesis. This course mainly is intended to give a brief introduction to various research methodology, procedures, and how to access data on research design. As a crucial part of a thesis is the methodology, this course provides an explanation for research methods and design terminology. Once students have a basic understanding of different types of research and research terminology by using qualitative or quantitative methods, or a mixture of both in the accounting and law fields, they will be in a better way to prepare for their theses.
