課程概述 Course Descriptions	This course is designed to develop students' English speaking and listening skills through communicative and task-based activities. The course is organized into three parts covering situational English, academic English, and presentation skills. Students will first practice speaking and listening in everyday situations before developing skills for academic and professional communication. Through lectures, discussions, debates, mock interviews, and presentations, students will strengthen their listening comprehension, build fluency in spoken English, and develop effective communication skills in a variety of settings.
學習目標 Learning Objectives	By the end of this course, students should be able to: ● communicate effectively in everyday, academic, and professional situations. ● understand and respond appropriately to spoken English in a variety of contexts. ● participate actively in discussions, debates, mock interviews, and other interactive speaking activities. ● plan, organize, and deliver clear and effective presentations in English.
