先修課程 Pre-requisite courses
課程目標 Course Objective	This course mainly covers financial accounting theory and research issues in the textbook and selected empirical financial accounting research papers (in Chinese) in related interesting topical areas. This course is designed to help master program students familiarize with these selected lines of financial accounting literature and develop their critical thinking skills for evaluating academic research work. The value of the class to students will depend very much on the level of discussions engaged by all participants.

其他說明 Other description	● Lecture and in-class discussion. ● Students are expected to regularly attend courses and to actively participate in class. If students are absent, it is the responsibility to contact a classmate to let the lecture obtain missed information. ● In order to maximize your learning and to receive credit for your classes, you must attend at least 80% of classes. Missing classes will impede your progress. ● The student is expected to treat the instructor and his/her classmates with respect. The course grade will be based on a final project, class presentation, assignments and class participation. ● My objective of grades evaluation is to treat all students fairly. To ascertain that students understand the material covered in each chapter, students have some journal pape for presentation and do a final project.
